Study: Pamlico Sound best area in state for wind energy

BUXTON

A new study says the best spot for utility-scale wind energy is in the Pamlico Sound off Buxton along North Carolina's Outer banks.

The Virginian-Pilot in Norfolk reported that feasibility study found most other state waters aren't suitable for wind-energy development. UNC Chapel Hill researchers conducted the study, which was requested last year by Dare Sen. Marc Basnight.

The study is to be unveiled at a state Coastal Resources Commission meeting Thursday.

The nine-month study analyzed the areas of available wind power, the ecological risks, user conflicts, electrical transmission infrastructure, regulatory barriers and carbon reduction potential.
